

MP-13 The Kanda River Path June, 2000

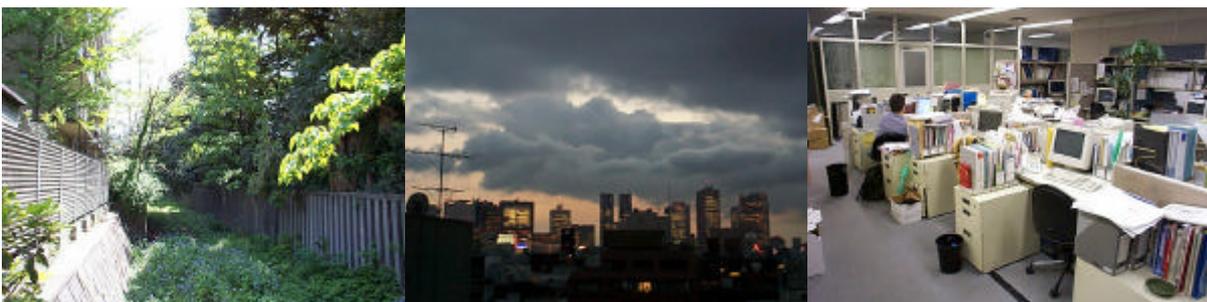

Leading up to, and then down into the former path of the Kanda River.

Notice the yellow tent in the middle photo! Shinjuku-gyoen Park is on the right.

Real dirt... Beneath the dirt is a huge pipe carrying the river's water in the same path.

It would be nice to live on the left... Back at the office that evening, outside/inside 12F.

The dry riverbed that I wrote about in LL-273 this past March is the same place I returned to in order to take the above pictures. It was a bit less jungle-like in March, but still spring-like.

The tall buildings seemingly in the distance are on the west side of Shinjuku Station, while my job is a couple of subway stops east of the station. The office... I spend an awfully lot of time there these days... I've been wanting to get away from the low paying and highly disrespected English teaching profession, and it looks like I have, but the overtime!

Copyright 2000 Lyle (Hiroshi) Saxon